

What I would ask the commissioners is this: Why would you trust these companies to be safeguarders of American citizen's online access to information and education? That's effectively what would happen. Why would let the access to the wonderful cornucopia of data that the Internet offers be reduced to a process of business decisions? Please please please continue to let the Internet be the unfettered tool for human development it is, and not just another part of our (unfortunate) cultural ideology that places the communication needs of corporations above everything else.
