

I understand that the FCC is now formulating new rules for internet use. I am very concerned that these new rules not interfere with the free use by everyone of information on the internet, and the ability to post content to the internet. The airwaves have been given over for free to profit-making media companies, and even public radio is now beholden to corporate sponsors. The internet is the place where citizens go now to find dissent from corporate opinions and propaganda, to connect with each other, to promote new ideas and their own products, and to converse about everything and anything.

The FCC must ensure net neutrality. Do not let this medium for exchange of ideas be corporatized as the airwaves and print media have been.

Thank you for considering my opinions.