

It is critical to American citizens' access to the internet that the FCC make it possible for us to control our relationship to the Internet by establishing rules that prevent phone and cable companies from determining what is on the Internet. We are depending on the FCC to enact the rules necessary to implement Net Neutrality, preventing the companies from buying control of the internet for their purposes. As we need the fair, balanced coverage of a free press, we need Net Neutrality to give us wide ranging sources of information to make good decisions.
