

Net Neutrality is something very dear to me. There is no media source, service, or opportunity outside of the Internet for ordinary citizens, especially one engaging tens of millions at a time. There are few opportunities in the media for people to express themselves or to target information without a paid staff and wealth beyond belief--except for the Internet. In fact, the very growth of the Internet has been driven by its grass roots, not the mega-corporations looking to make a profit on it. In the last few years, more than a million Americans have demanded Washington protect Net Neutrality -- the rule that lets me control my Internet experience. And in that time, those same Americans have expressed deep concern for granting control and opportunity to manipulate the rules of the road to a few, wealthy corporations, instead of the people--a clearly undemocratic move. It is now time for the FCC to embrace its role in protecting Americans (not corporations) by enacting strong rules to keep the Internet free from blocking, censorship and discrimination.

This is an issue with real consequences for real people. Don't give in to pressure from AT&T, Comcast, Verizon and their lobbyists. Stand with me and other Americans in support of a strong Net Neutrality rule.
