

It is outrageous to consider allowing connectivity providers to control, censor or in any way limit the content that can be accessed by users. The consolidation of media is an assault on the free press as things stand, and to allow the internet to be so coopted would irreparably damage our freedom of information.