

As far as the availability of local news and information in communities, I think the future of local news media is in good hands. With new technology always being developed, local communities are finding a way to nation build, or expand their horizons and continue to get information out to their people. Newspapers and television channels that only broadcast in a certain area tend to release news stories that involve many of the people that live in work in a specific community. No matter what the size of the community is, information is always being spread around the clock and small local communities do a great job of getting information and news out to people.
