

Examination of the Future of Media and Information Needs of Communities in a Digital Age

The future of Media lies within the hands of the general public in my opinion. In the digital age, consumers or are everyday citizens are the ones who are more likely to be on top of any type of news or any events that may be unfolding. Within our various communities, local news and information somewhat stands at a halt. Reason being is because most communities have restricted access to local news and have to rely on other means (i.e. the internet) to retrieve any type of news or additional news.
