

David Sutphen, co-chair of the AT&T-funded Internet Innovation Alliance, says that Net Neutrality is a "distraction" that "only concerns those already online." Sutphen calls Net Neutrality rules "divisive new regulations," which could have "unintended consequences" for those seeking to bridge the digital divide.

Government needs to balance the need to encourage business growth and competitiveness with the rights and needs of the American people; but above all to keep an eye on what is the greater good for the majority, and not where big money directs its heavy hand. We need government that has the courage to stand up to special interests for the people. Thank you for making democracy work for the American people.
