

David Sutphen, co-chair of the AT&T-funded Internet Innovation Alliance, says that Net Neutrality is a "distraction" that "only concerns those already online." Sutphen calls Net Neutrality rules "divisive new regulations," which could have "unintended consequences" for those seeking to bridge the digital divide.

Unless required by law, those opposed to Net Neutrality would not provide a level playing field for all of us to benefit from. Like the financial institutions they would work hard in the short run for the largest short term gains for themselves alone.