

David Sutphen, co-chair of the AT&T-funded Internet Innovation Alliance, says that Net Neutrality is a "distraction" that "only concerns those already online." Sutphen calls Net Neutrality rules "divisive new regulations," which could have "unintended consequences" for those seeking to bridge the digital divide.

Actually, it appears that current users will be affected less than those who are not connected. Net neutrality will increase access to the internet, while still providing excellent profits to the corporations responsible for extending the service. Keep it fair.