

David Sutphen, co-chair of the AT&T-funded Internet Innovation Alliance, says that Net Neutrality is a "distraction" that "only concerns those already online." Sutphen calls Net Neutrality rules "divisive new regulations," which could have "unintended consequences" for those seeking to bridge the digital divide.

We see the same pattern over and over again from the corporate right and big business -- tell enough lies and mislead the public and eventually they will be so confused they will doubt the wisdom of ANY proposal. It is a cynical manipulation of the public in democracy. Net neutrality is one of the last bulwarks of the public against corporate fascism.