

David Sutphen, co-chair of the AT&T-funded Internet Innovation Alliance, says that Net Neutrality is a "distraction" that "only concerns those already online." Sutphen calls Net Neutrality rules "divisive new regulations," which could have "unintended consequences" for those seeking to bridge the digital divide.

The truth is that Net Neutrality represents the people's right to exercise their First Amendment rights. It also AT&T and the other big communications corporations want to abridge that right, and set their own filters and parameters on how we communicate with one another. Their arguments are vague and specious at best. All they care about is more power, control, and profits for themselves. They care nothing for the health of our Republic. You, the FCC, a government agency, should care for the health of our Republic. Support Net Neutrality.
