

David Sutphen, co-chair of the AT&T-funded Internet Innovation Alliance, says that Net Neutrality is a "distraction" that "only concerns those already online." Sutphen calls Net Neutrality rules "divisive new regulations," which could have "unintended consequences" for those seeking to bridge the digital divide.

I don't see how there can be any question regarding the 'neutrality' of the internet. It must be either neutral or not exist. Anything else would be like someone standing in the library shoving me toward a particular aisle when I want to look somewhere else. Big business treats the citizenry like some sort of livestock/crop which should be milked daily for their own good. It is disgusting!
