

Clubs do have legitimate reasons to have multiple call signs.

D-Star systems are one example.

I am currently working towards a multiple site low power system that will require multiple calls.

It might not be unreasonable to limit the number of vanity club call signs and instead use sequentially assigned calls for additional club calls.

However, I do not see the need to limit to just one vanity call, but would be hard pressed to justify a few dozen. Some arbitrary number: three to six, would not be unreasonable.
