

David Sutphen, co-chair of the AT&T-funded Internet Innovation Alliance, says that Net Neutrality is a "distraction" that "only concerns those already online." Sutphen calls Net Neutrality rules "divisive new regulations," which could have "unintended consequences" for those seeking to bridge the digital divide.

These mega-corps will continue building lines and increasing their customer outreach regardless of whether or not they censor content. If they get a chance however, without "net neutrality" stopping them, they will gladly squelch the independent voice. Tell mega-corps to back off their perceived "ownership" of the world wide web.