

Since the XM/Sirius merger rates have gone up and consumer selection has gone down. A loose-loose situation. These companies entered into service with the idea they couldn't merge, then changed the rules to suit themselves. The simple fact is they carried too much overhead in high price studios in high rent cities: New York and Washington and paid inflated salaries to management and Howard Stern. No competition equals higher rates and poorer service.