

Before the FCC decided to pursue Net Neutrality protections, Fox News Channel's Glenn Beck warned his audience that the government was "trying to take over the media." Beck later said that Net Neutrality would "wildly affect your life and free speech" by forcing a "Marxist utopia" on the Internet. So... if Europe and Japan had invested heavily in their infrastructure now with net neutrality in place... and now offer much faster internet service, healthy competition among other providers and promote innovation...why can't the U.S. Telco's and Cable providers do the same. Smells like a grab for every bit of profit they can grab, to me.
