

Industry front group Americans for Prosperity wrote that there hasn't been "a single significant incident of egregious behavior" by phone and cable companies," adding that Net Neutrality is "a solution in search of a problem."

We race towards oligarchy if we continue to let corporations like Comcast squeeze our means of communication. We don't need Internet 2 or mini-webs. What we need is faster internet for the United States (we're far behind other countries) and at a cheaper price. There needs to be a law that mandates these companies to be more competitive. Why are there no new players in the communication/entertainment? Because these companies are too big to fail, and have too much control. I want the net to define the idea of NEUTRAL. I don't want any party or interest to have any sort of hold on MY INFORMATION. Our media is bad enough.
