

Before the FCC decided to pursue Net Neutrality protections, Fox News Channel's Glenn Beck warned his audience that the government was "trying to take over the media." Beck later said that Net Neutrality would "wildly affect your life and free speech" by forcing a "Marxist utopia" on the Internet. Network neutrality protects users' rights.

Free speech can flourish in an arena of ideas and open communication.

Corporate interests always use a divide-and-conquer approach to maximize gains, but always at the expense of some subset of the population. That is a serious threat to democracy.

Network neutrality merely uses the regulatory power of an oversight agency to assure a level playing field for all parties and prevent "walled gardens" of approved, safe, childish content.
