

The FCC's proposed regulations are fundamentally flawed based upon the supposition that the government can provide a forum for free speech better than can private industry. Free market competition is the best method available of providing for an open and free internet.

Additionally, the FCC doesn't have clear legislative authority to attempt to regulate the internet.