

Do not pursue or pass any regulations or restrictions regarding the internet, including but not limited to its usage, providers, or content.

Americans have never had more or easier access to express themselves than they now can on the internet.

Anything you may do will only result in the reduction or elimination of this fundamental Constitutional RIGHT.

Based on their own documented comments, it is clear that this reduction or elimination of American citizens' First Amendment rights is, unfortunately, EXACTLY Robert McChesney's and Mark Lloyd's ultimate goal.

We are not and will not be fooled or deceived by any propaganda, half truths, misleading statements, or even the oxymoronic name of McChesney's group "Free Press". Any actions you take that will in any way negatively affect the Free Market or our First Amendment rights will only be yet more proof of the true intentions of those pushing and or implementing these policies and will only serve to further awaken more Americans to this horrific truth.

Three Questions:

1. How will it "protect Americans' free speech" to reduce, restrict, or take away the tool and or market conditions that has provided them with the most and easiest access to express themselves they have ever had?
2. Would you or any of the groups currently pursuing this still want any of these restrictions if George Bush, Dick Cheney, or some "fascist" right wing religious zealot was in control of the government?
3. Do you really consider any of the "form letters" from individuals that were written by some group and are basically word for word other than the last sentence or so to be of any value?

Thanks, John
