

White Rose Community Television

City of York, 50 W. King Street, York PA 17401 717-968-4177

April 13, 2010
Chairman Julius Genachowski
Commissioner Michael J. Copps
Commissioner Robert M. McDowell
Commissioner Mignon Clyburn
Commissioner Meredith Attwell Baker
Federal Communications Commission
445 12th Street SW
Washington, DC 20554

RE: MB Docket No. 10-56

Dear Chairman Genachowski and Commissioners:

When it comes to diverse, locally created content, the committed men and women who work in public access (PEG) programming understand that television is at its most successful when it is both an informational and creative medium. That is why we are writing you in support of Comcast and NBC's proposed partnership.

White Rose Community Television (WRCT) is the local PEG access station in York, Pennsylvania. We air a wide range of community programming throughout a large portion of York County, including government meetings, educational specials and other content designed by and for residents of the greater York area. At WRCT, we hope to encourage increased civic participation and expanded mutual understanding through our programming efforts. Comcast has had a long and fruitful partnership with our channel and has provided significant financial and technical assistance aimed at meeting our goal of delivering the best possible experience for York residents.

Additionally, we have been pleased to see Comcast partner with charitable organizations and schools in York and throughout Pennsylvania both to spread technological awareness and to give back to their customers' hometowns and communities. In particular, the work Comcast does through its Digital Connectors program – an effort to spread technological knowhow and encourage young people to teach others – helps address the need to close America's "digital divide."

I hope you will take Comcast's commitment to local programming and local communities into account as you evaluate its venture with NBC Universal.

Most sincerely,

Stephen W. Busch, Director of Regional Partnerships
White Rose Community Television
City of York