

The period of weak government regulation - from Reagan to Bush to Clinton to Bush II - has to change during this rare, democratically-dominated moment in our nation's history. Republican voters are fired up; and the November elections could result in a sweep back towards a weak-regulation-minded Congress. Republican voters are clamoring for weak government regulation, which doesn't work; it may have caused the current world-wide economic crisis, and our history has proven it eventually results in economic disaster - a bubble that bursts while squeezing the lower & middle classes - the true heart and health of the economy - into chasing higher bills and debts and not being able to save, invest, become homeowners, etc. The government must provide reasonable checks & balances versus pure laissez-faire economics. Supporting the status quo of the internet - which is Net Neutrality - supports the type of internet which has been one of the technology miracles of the 20th century. Allowing private interests to change the nature of the internet will stifle it. The FCC must step up and provide reasonable government regulation - by making Net Neutrality the law of the land - and not make the same mistake that the our government made in under-regulating Wall Street for the past 28 years.