

I believe carriers should notify at least notify consumers via a free text message, email, or automated phone call when consumers begin go over their plans allotment, or if unusual usage were to occur that involves some additional fee from their regular monthly bill. This would avoid the news stories of "bill shock" and consumers fighting for something they were not aware of.