

I want to ask that the current standards set for how Cable Card devices work be reevaluated. Cable Labs has set too strict policies that doesn't allow anyone but the cable companies from being able to (easily) access encrypted cable signals except on their proprietary devices. There is no free market here. It's hurting consumer choice. Yet pirating of this "protected" content has not been hamped, in fact it's encouraged by these strict guidelines.