

Last summer my son was in Japan. We don't have international service on his cell phone. AT&T blocked his calls, but he was still able to send text messages. Since texting wasn't blocked, he and we didn't realize that we'd incur 'roaming charges'. $800 later we learned! Yes, we should have read the fine print, but they sent a message asking if we wanted to add International calls after his first attempt to call; why couldn't they have sent a message about the texting?
