RE: MB Docket 10-56

To Chairman Genachowski:

I am writing you today to offer support for Comcast's partnership with NBC Universal. As the Executive Director of the Denver Metro Chamber Leadership Foundation (DMCLF), it is my job to help create responsible and charitable practices among corporations in our area. Comcast is a superior example of a good corporate citizen in Colorado.

What we do at the DMCLF is two-fold. First, we work to encourage Denver's business community to take an active role in social and civic affairs. Second, we work to bridge the gap between private businesses, government offices and non-profit organizations. In the last year alone, our organization's programs graduated 317 professional leaders and 750 student leaders. These individuals are now acting as civic leaders and fostering cooperative development to shape a brighter future for metro Denver.

Comcast has left an important mark on our organization in many ways. Comcast's Vice President of Public Relations, Cindy Parsons, has served on our Board of Directors for the past three years. As chair of our communications committee and as a helpful advocate with our alumni program, she is a tremendous asset and has provided us thoughtful guidance year after year. We are thrilled that she will continue her service to our board for a second term.

Comcast is also a major supporter of DMCLF's Colorado Leadership Alliance Program. This alliance is unique in the country, as it serves to tie together 11 collegiate leadership programs and link them to their business communities across the state of Colorado. Not only have many Comcast' executives graduated from this program, but Comcast has made significant contributions to ensure the training of our collegiate level leaders.

Comcast's commitment to developing leaders in Denver is most evident when you consider the investment they made to bring broadband to Denver. Comcast's broadband internet and cable services reach hundreds of thousands in our area, and are a vital element of our social and economic success. Comcast doesn't stop there, but has granted courtesy communication services to schools and community centers throughout Denver ensuring that thousands of students and other citizens have access to the internet.

I ask that you keep this perspective in mind as you review the NBC Universal partnership proposal.

Warmest Regards,
