

Dear Chairman Genachowski;

We are both mature and informed adults when it comes to knowing that corporations limit and design their products and services for their own and stockholders bottom-line and not fully that of the consumers. I do not mean to imply that corporations do not offer valuable and viable services/products. Many do, but their ability to control the content and information based on their idea of "correct/worthwhile/usable/moral/the list can go on from here" is not the kind of power and control I want any company to have over something I use and enjoy and derive income from! I do not want a company to limit my ability to browse anything on the Web and limit what I read, hear, or view. Free speech is an inherent and inalienable right we have here in our country and is stated as such in our Constitution.

I rely on the Internet as a public platform for free speech, equal opportunity, economic growth and innovation. Without vital Net Neutrality protections, companies like Verizon and Comcast, which have a commercial incentive to limit the free-flowing Web, can decide whether I will have a voice online. These companies should not have the power to determine my fate on the Internet.

Thank you for your time, Chairman.

James Carraway