

I use the Internet on a daily bases for many aspects of my life. Personal friendships and relationships, work, and entertainment are all vital portions of my life that the Internet assists me in maintaining. I do not typically use large corporate websites, so a limit on web freedom would significantly inhibit these aspects of my life. Some potential ramifications include, falling out of touch with friends and relatives, loss of business income and reduced leisure time.

Without vital Net Neutrality protections, companies like Verizon and Comcast, which have a commercial incentive to limit the free-flowing Web, can decide whether I will have a voice online. These companies should not have the power to determine my fate on the Internet.

The FCC must have the power to protect consumer access to the most important communications medium of our time. The FCC must stand with me and keep the Internet in the hands of the people who use it every day. Please reclassify broadband as a "telecommunications service" and keep the Internet open and free of corporate gatekeepers.
