

I am a web developer and am attempting to launch a few small online businesses. Without Net-Neutrality the cost of my websites, which make very little money right now, would be too great to even attempt starting my little endeavour. I would have to pay to register the domain, get better speeds, deliver my content, etc. We cannot allow ISPs to stifle free speech and small startups! What were some small startups ? Google, Yahoo, Facebook, you name it. College students and developers started multi billion dollar companies....

If we and the FCC do not act now me, and many others like me, will be sunk. I have a legit business model, everyone I speak with agrees, and the only reason I can go forward with my plan is because the Internet provides a fairly low entry barrier into the small business world. Small business and freedom of speech are what makes this country great and if we let big corporations gouge everyone so they can line their pockets with even more money WE ALL will be sunk.
