

I write a blog and I really, really need to be able to access odd websites to get the information I need to make my blog accurate.

Secondly, I have friends all over the world, having lived abroad as a Teacher of English as a Second Language. I can sometimes send them information that's censored in their own countries (for example, Iran). Do we really want to restrict Americans' ability to do stuff like that?!?!?

Does America want to become a second-rate power in the world wide web? Other developed countries are already using the web to create business and spark innovation. Our ability to keep up -- and surpass -- them is dependent on an utterly free use of the Internet. We don't want to stifle that!!!

The FCC must have the power to protect consumer access to the most important communications medium of our time. The FCC must stand with me and keep the Internet in the hands of the people who use it every day. Please reclassify broadband as a "telecommunications service" and keep the Internet open and free of corporate gatekeepers.
