

It is the FCC's responsibility to maintain the Net Neutrality of the internet. Our democracy depends on this forum for free speech and access to information that is not vetted by corporate interests.

Without vital Net Neutrality protections, companies like Verizon and Comcast, which have a commercial incentive to limit the free-flowing of ideas and content, can decide who will have a voice online. These companies should not have the power to determine my fate on the Internet.

The FCC should not have the right to broker private deals that would hand control over the Internet to a few massive phone and cable companies. The agency must side with the public and protect consumer access to what is currently the most important communications in existence.

The FCC must regain its resolve to protect Net Neutrality on wired and wireless networks. Please reclassify broadband as a "telecommunications service" and keep the Internet open and free of corporate gatekeepers.
