

I rely on the Internet as a public platform for free speech, equal opportunity, economic growth and innovation. I use the Internet as a means to access information that caters to my specific needs and interests, not those of a partisan well paid commercial interest. Without vital Net Neutrality protections, companies like Verizon and Comcast, which have a commercial incentive to limit the free-flowing Web, can decide whether I will have a voice online. These companies should not have the power to limit my choices on the Internet or deter my access to competitive goods, services and information. I use the Internet as a medium to facilitate the purchase of goods and services. The information highway leads from my computer to the sales centers of millions of online merchants. The FCC shouldn't be cutting private deals that would hand control of the Internet to a few massive phone, media and cable companies. Any compromise that allows Internet providers to build toll lanes online is not real Net Neutrality.

The agency must stand with the public and protect consumer access to the most important communications medium of our time. The FCC must regain its resolve to protect Net Neutrality on wired and wireless networks. Please reclassify broadband as a "telecommunications service" and keep the Internet open and free of corporate gatekeepers.

Can you imagine what America would be like if all the roads were owned by corporations? Corporations are trying to monetize the paths that people follow on the internet. The path from customer to goods and services should be free of corporate control. The Information super-highway - just like I-25 - should be free of corporate tolls and roadblocks. Keep the Net Neutral, don't sell out our access to goods, services and Information - Side with the American public not the Corporate pocket book.
