

The internet is not a private portal used solely for companies to set up profit centers. The internet has become an undeniable information distribution platform, a forum for innovation, and a primary means of communication for millions of Americans. Allowing companies with financial interests to determine how the internet should be used would be wreckless and would only serve those company's bottom lines. We don't limit people's access to libraries or education in this country in the interest of a few large companies, we shouldn't do so with the internet either.

The FCC can't cut private deals that would hand control over the Internet to a few massive phone and cable companies. Any compromise that allows Internet providers to build toll lanes online is not real Net Neutrality.

The agency must stand with the public and protect consumer access to the most important communications medium of our time. The FCC must regain its resolve to protect Net Neutrality on wired and wireless networks. Please reclassify broadband as a "telecommunications service" and keep the Internet open and free of corporate gatekeepers.
