

I use the Internet in favor of every other communication medium, to do research, to stay in touch with my friends, to learn about the world and to communicate to my government, like this. I work at a web development company. I use the Internet for hours and hours every day and conduct the majority of my art and business through it.

The Internet is the most democratic communication medium in the world, and the last one to resist the sway of large corporations. It is 100% the job of the FCC to prevent big business interests from bending it to their own whims and interfering with its development for the sake of their own profits. ISPs are ruthless about this kind of thing, and beyond the reach of individual citizens. It is up to the FCC and the government to protect the rights of these citizens and to look out for their well-being.
