

The US is meant to allow people to have the right to do what the people want to do. Perhaps the idea of money motivates most people, but there are those who merely have a desire to learn what they can from the resources available to them.

Without vital Net Neutrality protections, companies like Verizon and Comcast, which have a commercial incentive to limit the free-flowing Web, can decide whether I will have a voice online. These companies should not have the power to determine my fate on the Internet.

By allowing two of the largest companies to control or decide what I want to learn, you are essentially admitting that your purpose in the country is not to uphold justice, but to support those who hold economical leverage, in the hopes that you will gain monetary value.

Any compromise that allows Internet providers to build toll lanes online is not real Net Neutrality.

The agency must stand with the public and protect consumer access to the most important communications medium of our time. The FCC must regain its resolve to protect Net Neutrality on wired and wireless networks. Please reclassify broadband as a "telecommunications service" and keep the Internet open and free of corporate gatekeepers.
