

Right now there is only one Internet that treats everybody and all content equally. But Google and Verizon have a proposal would change all of that. Yet it's not Google's place to write regulations ? that's the job of the FCC, which has failed to act quickly to protect American consumers. It is imperative that the FCC take action immediately to enact strong net neutrality rules.