

I am a supporter of Network Neutrality. I have just read http://www.fcc.gov/Daily_Releases/Daily_Business/2010/db0901/DA-10-1667A1.pdf and would like to comment.

My particular area of concern is that the corporations that connect users to the internet will begin specializing the internet toward certain things. My main concern with this is that special packages will need to be purchased to run certain programs. I believe that it should be the sole discretion of the individual that determine how their bandwidth is used and making available a product which discriminates against certain information sent goes against our first amendment right of freedom of speech. It is easy to see a slippery slope into controlling the type of messages people can send.

It is my hope that the FCC intervenes so that the internet will not be restricted by any individual, corporation, or government and access remains fair for all.
