

The idea that corporations could potentially control and funnel the internet in order to control what I see frankly scares me quite a bit. I have listened to the words of Al Franken regarding this issue and agree wholeheartedly with what he says. Many of my fellow students at U.C. Berkeley feel the same way regarding the open internet. The open internet must not come to a end. It is what gives the little guy such as me the ability to say things that are heard just as loudly as the conglomerates that run the airwaves. A simple blog on the internet can have as much political force as CNN and that is the true beauty of the internet.

Thank you for allowing to give my input on this issue.

Simrunn Girn