

I am writing regarding docket 10-145. As a blind person, I have been frustrated with the lack of accessibility with cell phones and other devices. The cell phone industry has changed the way we communicate today and as it evolves further, it will become more important for all of us. It is imperative that wireless devices become accessible. While some strides have been made, in most cases, the menus don't read well, most people cannot use text messaging, calls cannot be identified etc. I strongly urge the FCC to take immediate action to insure that accessibility become a priority in the standards for wireless communications.

Sincerely,

Barbara Lombardi
