Article 19. Universal Declaration of Human Rights

+ Everyone has the right to freedom of opinion and expression; this right includes freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers.

Corporate media (print and broadcast) only cover women's issues 24%* of the time, hence the internet is an essential communications tool for women.

MEDIA JUSTICE

Traditional media reform and communications strategies are insufficient to address structural racism.....

Justice Framing

..... Justice framing is a methodology that exposes structural inequity, emphasizes social responsibility and corporate accountability, and highlights the role of government and policy. Justice framing uses news coverage, policy, entertainment media, and all forms of communications to move public conversations toward a collective vision of progressive structural change.

Women's Institute for Freedom of the Press in the 1970s with its Six Point Communications Program advocated:

1. Democracy is

1) EVERY PERSON having an equal opportunity to be heard so their information (opinions, experience, perspectives) can be taken into account in the decision-making, which enables them to participate in self-government as political equals -- the very definition of democracy.

2) SOCIETY needs everyone's information in order to reach viable decisions -- the goal of democracy.
