MB Docket 07-57

FCC

Please do not raise the cap. We, the consumers, were promised that we would not have any changes to our listening experiences if the merger was allowed. What a "crock"! The first thing that happened after the merger is that SIRIUS fired most of the XM music DJ's and replaced them with their own people, and most of them are voice tracked instead of live. In addition to that, Sirius reduced the playlists to the point where they are boringly repetitious.

Now they (SIRIUS-XM) want to be allowed to raise their fees after already being allowed to raise them by adding on the US music royalty fees in 2009. Internet streaming, which used to be included with a subscription, is now an extra charge. So as I understand this issue. Sirius Xm wants to charge even more money for less in the way of services.

Of course they have competition, they destroyed the superb listening quality we once enjoyed. I and many others are now seeking new sources to replace what we lost with the merger. We are all looking at options for our listening pleasure as we are now being held up by the current management of Sirius-XM, and because of demand, new ones pop up with regularity.
