Dear Ms. Dortch:

On April 1, 2011, Ross Lieberman, ACA, Randy Sifers, Kelley Drye & Warren LLP, and the undersigned met with the following staff of the Wireline Competition Bureau (“WCB”) and the Wireless Telecommunications Bureau (“WTB”): WCB -- Sharon Gillett, Steven Rosenberg, Patrick Halley, Carol Matthey, Amy Bender, Katie King, Alex Minard, Ken Burnley, and Joe Cavender; and, WTB – Scott Mackoul and Sue McNeil. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss the Commission’s proposed reform of the high-cost fund and the creation of the Connect America Fund (“CAF”).

ACA initially communicated its position on reforming the high-cost universal service fund and instituting a CAF in its filing in the National Broadband Plan docket.<sup>1</sup> With the adoption by the Commission of its Notice of Proposed Rulemaking on universal service reform on February 8, 2010,

ACA has again been working with its members to further refine its position and provide the Commission with greater specificity about the policies and operations for the CAF and other mechanisms to ensure universal broadband service. In general, ACA supports the creation of competitively-neutral fund to achieve universal access to broadband. At the same time and as part of an overall plan to reform the high-cost fund and expand support for broadband service in unserved areas, ACA believes it is essential that the Commission ensure that the overall high-cost fund is capped at the year-end 2010 level, support is not provided where there are competitive providers offering service without using support, and there is a sufficient transition for smaller telephone companies now drawing high-cost support.

In regard to the specifics of the CAF, ACA believes that the Commission should focus on providing support in unserved areas and phase-in the process of disaggregating current study areas. In particular, ACA suggests that, for a period of eight years, the Commission permit smaller telephone companies to elect to continue to receive support for a period so long as they agree to deploy high-speed broadband service. As for awarding support in unserved areas, ACA supports using reverse auctions. These auctions should be based solely upon objective criteria. That is, the Commission should determine prior to the auction: the unserved area to be auctioned, the level of broadband performance to be delivered to households, and the price for that service. Bids would then be accepted on the basis of these factors, and winners chosen accordingly. ACA will elaborate on these issues when it files comments in the above-reference dockets on April 18, 2011.

This letter is being filed electronically pursuant to section 1.1206 of the Commission's rules.

Sincerely,

Thomas Cohen
