

I am a current T-Mobile customer and if AT&T and T-Mobile merges I am worried that my cell phone bill will go up. I am very happy with my current T-Mobile rate. AT&T's rate is much higher and it will be expensive for me. Besides I also go to overseas for business travel and currently AT&T and T-Mobile are the only two companies who has GSM technology that works in Asia and Europe. Verizon and Sprint CDMA technology doesn't work in overseas. It is very important for my business that my cell phone number works in overseas so that I am connected with my customers even I am out of the country. T-Mobile provides very good roaming charges for overseas and they have good package deal for roaming on calls, emails and sms services compare to AT&T. If AT&T and T-Mobile merges there will be only one GSM company in the USA and there will be no competitor. FCC needs to realize that people not only uses cell phones for domestic purpose but they also use the cell phone for business purpose in overseas. Besides AT&T's domestic calling rates are much higher than T-Mobile. I am dead against this merger and I don't want FCC to approve this merger. If FCC approves this merger, I will understand that FCC does not want consumer to save money. They are here to serve only big corporations, make lobbyist happy and make CEO's richer. This is a nonsense deal to get more money out of consumers and I am surprised that FCC is even considering it. What FCC needs to do is not allowing Apple to sell iPhone only to AT&T and Verizon. Apple should be forced to sell iPhone to all major carriers including T-Mobile and Sprint. The reason T-Mobile has agreed to this merger because T-Mobile is losing customers to AT&T because of iPhone (according to Wall Street Journal). iPhone and the Apple is the big culprit here and forcing consumers to pay more indirectly. FCC should learn from Canada. Apple is forced to sell iPhone to all carriers in Canada. If Canadians can think of this why can't we americans? I guess because we want our lobbyist to make rich. My request to FCC is not to approve this merger and force Apple to sell iPhone to T-Mobile instead and you will see all the problems are solved and we consumer can continue to save money and use that savings for other expenses to pump up the economy instead of making AT&T and its CEO richer. Thank you.
