

FCC,

This ATT and T-mobile takeover is NOT something that I am for one interested in seeing happen. ATT is a terrible company with innovation and competitive - well LACK of innovation and competitiveness with other companies. Their home highspeed internet is already terrible enough with being competitive with other providers in my area. Their Mobile division I feel is a joke. if Tmobile is the 3rd largest cellular network, HOW do they think buying tmobiles mobile network (data services only) is going to help bring on a even larger user base. This is no longer progress in the cellular market. Its like we're going back in the 1900s with Ford ONLY offering the model-T in any color you want as long as its Black. Thats fine for some, but most people want options and innovation with technology. ATT has never been the first to provide new features or devices.

They are limiting the 'openness' of the Android platform already. I have no idea why they costs so much compared to Sprint/Nextel when it comes to prices in regards to minute usage and data rates. What are they really providing that is so much better? Shouldnt economics provide lower prices for service offerings?

This US Citizen does not want to see approval.

Thank You.
