

I'm firmly against the sale of T-Mobile to AT&T because it reduces competition in a space that really needs it.

I chose T-Mobile because of their great pricing and because they are consistently ranked number one in customer service compared to AT&T who are consistently ranked last in customer service.

The sale would also give AT&T 100% of the GSM spectrum in this country which would give them no incentive to innovate and give them a lot of power over handset manufacturers.

AT&T is a company that has shown disregard for their customers with awful service for their iPhone users as well as being the only carrier that completely locks down their Android phones. They have gone out of their way to block access to functionality on Android phones that other carriers have willingly allowed.

Giving so much of the wireless market to any one company is a dangerous proposal regardless of the company but giving it to AT&T would be signaling the end of competition and innovation in the wireless space.

Please deny the merger.
