

The concern for me is the monopolization of the market. AT&T maintains that there are many local carriers to choose from, but if you want to move about the country and maintain cell coverage you've got the choice of At&t, Verison, Sprint, and formerly T-Mobile.

T-Mobile used to have some of the cheapest rates, best data plans, and the newest Android phones with the least amount of proprietary corporate bloatware. These are practices that I don't see AT&T continuing and that makes me sad/fearful.

I have been with AT&T for the past 8 years and I plan on switching soon when I get married in Sept. When that time comes, I want options. Good ones.
