RE: WT 11-65 Proceeding

Dear FCC Commissioners:

The City of El Cenizo, like many communities along the U.S and Mexico border, have experienced explosive growth in recent years, and keeping pace with the demands on city infrastructure. Providing essential technological services for our families and business can be challenging.

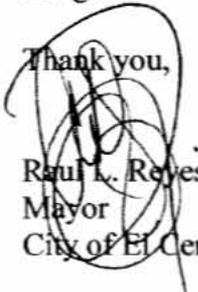

Here in El Cenizo, we have worked closely with local, state and federal agencies to pave all of our streets, build our first fire station, establish our first municipal park and build out more than 150,000 feet of sidewalks. We now have our own police department and city courts. We're proud of the investments the city has made on behalf of our residents: upgrading technology hardware, software and Internet access in local government offices.

While we have accomplished so much here in El Cenizo in recent years, we know that if we are to strengthen our position among small Texas cities we must look for ways to position El Cenizo as an attractive home for business. To be truly successful and to ensure we're able to progress forward in a positive manner, I know how critically important it is for our city to further develop its technology and communication infrastructure.

To see a company like AT&T commit to bring high-speed wireless service to hundreds of millions of Americans – including more cities like mine – is a good reason to support their merger with T-Mobile.

We would be grateful for the expanded access to the next generation of high-speed wireless service, and we hope that the FCC concurs and approves the merger.

Thank you,

Raul L. Reyes
Mayor
City of El Cenizo, Texas
