

I am alarmed at the prospect that the FCC would jeopardize the GPS system of navigation that I as a pilot use exclusively in my late-model aircraft. I have spent a great deal of money adopting the GPS navigation system that the FAA has also spent a great deal of money on implementing, and it is inconceivable that a private company could be allowed to degrade this system and jeopardize its proven safety and utility.

I think a nationwide wireless system is a great idea and I do support its deployment, but not at the expense of degrading the vitally important existing GPS navigation system. Find another band, guys.