

I am concerned about the reported interference of these wireless networks with existing GPS signals. I rely on the GPS system for navigation in my private aircraft as well as in my automobiles. The FAA's next generation traffic control system is highly dependant on GPS. Any interference with the GPS system will result in hazardous conditions for the flying public. It is my opinion that FCC is responsible to make sure any new system does not interfere with existing systems in the rf spectrum.